

At this stage, firms should focus on improving product quality, features and performance. They may enter new market areas.

New versions and models at different price points should be introduced to cater to the requirements of different types of buyers.

Firms should focus on brand image creation of the product through promotional activities.

The growth stage can be extended with frequent product upgrades and enhancements that slow down movement into maturity.^[15]

If product innovation has not kept pace with competing products and services or if innovations and technological changes have caused the industry to become obsolete, sales will suffer and the life cycle will experience a phase of decline.^[16]
