Case of Single Brand Retail

- Single brand retail in India had its FDI capped for a very long time at 49% on the grounds of it being a threat to local farmers, small artists, small shop owners etc.
- The government, after long debates, allowed 100% FDI. It also allowed owning direct online stores before physical stores in India.
- This allowed the likes of IKEA and Walmart (through Flipkart acquisition) to enter India and had implications by changing the dynamics of various industries.
