

No. of suppliers in the market

(Monopoly/Duopoly/Few/Many/Excess Supply)

The greater the number of suppliers for a product, the lesser the supplier power that the industry will face. This is because more firms are willing to sell the same product, allowing the buyer the option to choose from a competitive market. Thus, no supplier can dictate terms.

Thus, the number of suppliers is an important factor to judge supplier power. For labour and staff, supplier power can be judged by how well organised the labour groups are. Organised labour unions increase their bargaining power for them.