

Risks and growth need a balance between them.

A too-risky business with high growth prospects may not be the best choice for an entrepreneur or investor. Similarly, a very poor growth potential but low risks will also be unattractive to many. A balance is needed between growth and risks.

The fifth stage is the last in conducting any industry analysis. At this stage, enough information has been collected in a structured manner. This information will enable any entrepreneur or investor to decide rationally whether to enter the industry or not.