

Pains

Pains are obstacles, inconveniences, or sources of dissatisfaction for the customers. The customer is seeking to get relief from these pains. Pain is anything that is disliked by the customer. He or she cannot afford to ignore it and wishes to get relief from it, and is even ready to pay for it.

Products that relieve the customers of their pains add value to the offering and strengthen the product-customer fit.

If the pains of the customers are left unanswered or unattended, the pains act as 'value destroyers' of the product and the business.

Customer pains can be before, during, or after the process of trying to get a job done. Each dissatisfaction and dislike of the customers, through the entire process, should be identified, as each is a potential pain point that can be relieved.

Pain removal is an illusion. Trying to relieve one pain creates another. The idea is to relieve more severe pains, even if they create a few less severe pains.

Pain points come in all shapes and sizes. Companies with hard to navigate website, poor logistics etc can be pain points.

a website with an interface that is difficult to navigate.

customer service that is not very responsive.

a sense of being overcharged when buying a product or service.

Pain Points in Websites