

In an attempt to create multiple gains or relieve multiple pains, the company may fall into the trap of doing too many things, at the same time.

It may engage in activities that have no direct impact on the customers: their pains and gains.

The company may even end up targeting the wrong set of customers.

Entrepreneurs, as well as the analysts, must be careful and try to identify such wasted efforts. These are not just a waste of time and effort per se, but they also take away energy, attention, and resources from the value-creating activities. When releasing a product, focus on core 1-2 features and the rest can be added along the way.