

To sum up the process:

However, this entire process assumes that customer profiling has been done properly.

Then they should be ranked in order of importance based on the severity of each pain and gain to be addressed. And then focus on few.

The first step in both analyzing existing products and creating new products is effective customer profiling. No analyst or entrepreneurs should rush during the step. Better is the understanding of the client profile, better outcome will come out.

When more and more time is spent on customer mapping, new insights will be gained, which will help strengthen the value proposition. Also, customers are continuously evolving and changing their requirements.

Thus, the process of customer profiling and then accordingly adjusting the features of products and services remains a continuous one.