

Competitive Positioning

Within any industry, some firms are placed at an advantage to others. This competitive positioning is a cumulative result of smaller decisions regarding differentiation over time. Competitive positioning is at a firmspecific level only and not at the industry level.

Accounting Story

The numbers of a business say a lot about the business—such as its quality, the people, and the changes, provided the right questions are asked. This stage help understand the business quantitatively.

People

The people who run the business are the most important aspects of the circuit. They influence all the previous levels of the circuit. Understanding the vision, motivation and the ability of the management who are running the firm are critical aspects.
