Samsung ordered to pay $118M to Netlist

A federal jury in Marshall, Texas, has ruled that Samsung Electronics must pay $118 million in damages to Netlist, following a patent lawsuit. The case revolves around technology that improves data processing in high-performance memory products, which Netlist claims was used without permission in Samsung's memory modules. The decision comes on the heels of a similar verdict last year, when the jury awarded Netlist $303 million in damages in a related case against Samsung. Netlist has also had success, recently securing $445 million in damages from chipmaker Micron in May for infringement on some of the same patents. <https://bit.ly/4ijiTKO>
