Google Chrome on iPhone gets circle to search-like feature

Google is making it easier to search for things directly from your screen with a new Google Lens update for iPhones. This feature, similar to Android's circle to search, allows users to perform visual searches without taking a screenshot or opening a new tab. Whether you're reading an article, shopping online, or watching a video, you can now search instantly using simple gestures like drawing, highlighting, or tapping on the screen. "If you have an iPhone, you'll find a new Lens option that lets you select and search what's on your screen within Chrome or the Google app, using whatever gesture comes naturally," Google announced in a blogpost. <https://tinyurl.com/4z5kx7y>

Facebook will delete your live videos after 30 days

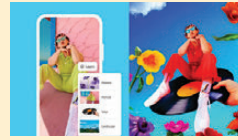

Meta-owned Facebook is a popular social media platform. If you're someone who creates a lot of content on Facebook, you might want to read this. The social media platform is updating its policies. Starting from February 19, Facebook will automatically start deleting live broadcast recordings that are 30 days old. Recordings older than 30 days will not be saved on the platform unless a user purposely saves them. Users must download their videos before the deadline or share them as 90-second Reels to prevent permanent deletion. Meta explained the change by saying that most interaction and live video views occur within the first few weeks. To optimise storage and enhance user experience, Facebook is aligning its video storage policies with industry standards going forward. <https://tinyurl.com/25586hu8>

One month later, TikTok returned to the US Google Play Store and Apple App Store. For those who are unaware, a federal ban
