The mobile gaming community in India is seeing massive growth. With that, the demand for good gaming phones is also increasing, and as the demand increases, the supply does too. Today, we have so many great gaming smartphones in India, which come at a price that doesn't break your bank. Among them, the iQOO Neo 10R and the Realme P3 Ultra hold the top position for gaming phones under Rs

30,000. But which one suits you better? Read along to find out, as I dig into the details of both of these smartphones to help you decide which one is a better fit.

Design and build

The first difference that you will notice between the two smartphones is that the Realme P3 Ultra is noticeably sleeker, with a 7.38mm thickness, compared to the 8mm of the iQOO Neo 10R. While both phones feature plastic backs, Realme has acrylic elements that give it a more premium, glossy look.

Another standout design feature is the quad-curved edges on the P3 Ultra, which not only enhance grip but also add to the overall aesthetic. And let's not forget the unique moon print on the back that glows in the dark. Although I did not find myself using the feature so much it adds a fun and stylish touch.

As far as durability is concerned, the Realme P3 Ultra has an IP69 rating, compared to the IP65 rating on the
