

Mob attack

A contemporary engraving shows protestors and the police breaking up an abolitionist meeting at Boston's Tremont Temple Baptist Church on December 3, 1860—a year after the execution of abolitionist John Brown. Although Northerners were widely opposed to the extension of slavery, many regarded those in favor of outright abolition as troublesome fanatics.