

UNION GENERAL (1815-72)

HENRY HALLECK

"Old Brains," as Henry Halleck was often called, was author of Elements of the Military Art, one of the West Point Military Academy's most venerated textbooks in the 1850s. Although a theoretician of the first rank and the Union's general-in-chief from July 1862, Halleck proved not to be a field commander. His talents lay more in administration, planning, and logistics. In 1864, when President Lincoln replaced him as general-in-chief with Ulysses S. Grant, he made Halleck the army chief of staff. In that position Old Brains found his niche, ensuring that Union forces had everything necessary to guarantee victory.
