

CONFEDERATE GENERAL (1825–65)

AMBROSE POWELL HILL

Hill's name was on both Robert E. Lee's and Stonewall Jackson's dying lips, such was the impression the slight, red-bearded "Little Powell" made as a fighter. The Virginian Hill and his Light Division saved the day in numerous closely fought battles, including the Seven Days Battles. As commander of the Third Corps, Hill was one of Lee's most trusted lieutenants before being killed in action outside Petersburg –barely a week before the Confederate surrender at Appomattox.
