

Nevertheless, Sherman was making a steady advance, and when he reached the northern edge of Atlanta's fortifications two months later, he was facing a new opponent. On July 17, Johnston was relieved of command and replaced by the more aggressive John Bell Hood.