

procession down New York's Fifth Avenue. In the Midwest, crowds gathered to see the funeral train pass on its way to Calvary Cemetery in St. Louis. Tributes were published and statues erected to the celebrated general. But despite Northern plaudits, Sherman's name remained anathema across the South.

Sherman's sword

General William Tecumseh Sherman wore this Model 1850 staff and field officer's sword, made by the Ames Manufacturing Company of Chicopee, Massachusetts, during the Battle of Shiloh in Tennessee on April 6-8, 1862.
