

The Assassination of Lincoln

With the war effectively won and the Union virtually restored, the nation needed a leader of vision to heal the wounds of four years in which brother had fought brother. John Wilkes Booth's murderous action on Good Friday of 1865 removed the man best fitted for the task.