

The Election of 1860

The passions and conflicts of the preceding decade over the rights of states to maintain slavery were embodied in the presidential contest of November 1860. Americans participated in the election campaign with great enthusiasm but little or no sense that the outcome would be disunion and war.