

AFTER

The expansion of rights and freedoms was limited by the resistance of Southern whites and by growing Northern apathy. With the end of Reconstruction, many hard-fought gains were lost.

LOSING HARD-WON RIGHTS

In the late 1880s, Southern states began introducing Jim Crow laws, which challenged the Fourteenth Amendment. These laws legalized segregation between white and Black people in areas such as public transportation, waiting rooms, theaters, schools, hospitals, and other public institutions. Facilities for Black citizens were usually of inferior quality. In many states, marriage between whites and Black Americans was banned.

EDUCATIONAL GAINS

After the war, Black colleges (Howard University, Fisk University, and Hampton University) were established with the aim of training teachers. By 1869, in the 3,000 Freedmen's schools, more than half the teachers were Black. However, in the next decade, few children received any formal education. Literacy among Black Americans increased in the postwar period from one in ten in 1865 to one in two by 1900.
