

Economic factors

The economy of the South was built on enslavement. The cotton industry alone, which had expanded massively after the invention of the cotton gin in 1793, generated huge plantations that depended on the labor of enslaved people.