

CONFEDERATE GENERAL (1818-93)

P. G. T. BEAUREGARD

Pierre Gustave Toutant Beauregard, born on a plantation in St. Bernard Parish, Louisiana, had a distinguished record in the prewar army, including combat service in Mexico. While he had significant talents, he likened himself too much to Napoleon, and his fame after the fall of Fort Sumter further inflated his ego.

Beauregard's performance was mixed at the battles of First Bull Run (First Manassas) and Shiloh, but during the summer of 1864, he served the Confederacy well at Bermuda Hundred and Petersburg.
