

The Sinews of War

Both the United States and the Confederacy had to build the bureaucratic and physical infrastructure necessary for waging a large industrial war in North America. Both proved successful, largely due to the work of two veterans of the prewar U.S. Army, Montgomery Meigs for the North and Josiah Gorgas for the South.