

Courting European Allies

Many Confederates believed that Great Britain would intervene in their favor, but it proved reluctant to risk war with the Union and instead declared its neutrality. The Confederacy was able to acquire important military supplies from Europe, including the infamous ships known as "commerce raiders".