

Identity badges

Neither army issued identity tags, so troops inscribed their names or units onto pieces of bone, like these Confederate ones, metal, paper, or even acorns, so that their bodies could be identified if they were killed in battle.