

AFTER

At the end of the war, 174,223 Confederate soldiers surrendered to the Union, but some former soldiers resisted Northern control of the South for years to come.

RETURNING HOME

The surrender agreement made by Grant and Lee at Appomattox in 1865 allowed Southern troops to return home without being prosecuted for treason. They had to surrender their weapons, except for officers' sidearms, but were allowed to keep their own horses. Most soldiers returned home on foot, dressed in little more than rags, and begged for food along the way.

KU KLUX KLAN

Many Confederate war veterans were reluctant to accept Northern domination and the according of civil rights to freed slaves. Groups of loosely associated vigilantes formed the Ku Klux Klan, which resisted U.S. rule in the South and terrorized Black Americans. Although the Klan was suppressed, other armed vigilante groups, such as the White League, continued the fight against Black rights and Republicanism into the 1870s.
