

Fighting on Foot

Infantry tactics in the Civil War were based on existing technology, local terrain, and the European tradition of warfare in which American officers were steeped. Heavy casualties resulted from the failure to adapt battlefield tactics to take account of the increased defensive firepower of infantry and artillery.