

of daily items. A “market revolution” stimulated far-reaching changes in the economy and society.

A slave economy

While the North grew rich through industrial processes developed in Europe, the sources of wealth in the South were raw materials—chiefly cotton—grown and picked by enslaved people.