

PIONEERS GAZE IN AWE AT THE NEW WORLD

In Westward the Course of Empire Takes its Way (1861), artist Emanuel Leutze promoted the idea of Manifest Destiny –a 19th-century notion that encouraged westward expansion to the Pacific Ocean. Occupying the New World was perceived by many European Americans to be a right and people journeyed west in search of a better life, regardless of the impact on Indigenous people. Journalist John L. O'Sullivan urged them to "overspread the continent allotted by Providence."
