

Troops at Bull Run

Edwin Forbes's sketch shows the right wing of the Confederate army under Longstreet advancing through gunpowder smoke on General McDowell's corps. Forbes was the artist-correspondent for Frank Leslie's magazines.

“The men were brought down
from the field ... till they covered acres.”

CLARA BARTON, WHO CARED FOR THE WOUNDED AFTER SECOND BULL RUN

The final encounter

It seemed that Pope would be utterly routed, but as his men fell back in disarray, the general succeeded in organizing a defense that checked the Confederate surge and allowed an orderly withdrawal to Centreville after nightfall. The next day, Jackson was dispatched on another flanking march in an attempt to cut Pope off from Washington, but the Confederates were weary. After fighting the Union rearguard in a thunderstorm at Chantilly—an engagement in