

¹² The Bormann fuse, made of pewter, was screwed into the nose of a shell. The marks on the face indicate quarter seconds. The gunner would set the fuse by puncturing the face at the time desired.

¹³ The pendulum Hausse was a bottom-weighted brass sight hung on a bracket that allowed it to swing. In this way, the sight stayed vertical. It was lined up with the blade sight on the muzzle of the gun.