

Confederate general Ewell

Despite losing a leg at Second Bull Run, Ewell justified Lee's confidence in him at this point in the war by raiding the garrison at Winchester.

Commander's strategy

Lee was certain that a Confederate victory or series of victories in Pennsylvania or northern Maryland at this juncture would strengthen the Copperheads— Northern Democrats opposed to the Civil War who favored a peace agreement with the South. Thus, he reasoned, Lincoln would become a president without a party in the
