

The third day at Gettysburg

The outcome of the battle was decided by Lee's decision to launch an all-out attack on the Union center in the afternoon. The assault on Cemetery Ridge resulted in unsustainable Confederate casualties.

Pickett's Charge

Longstreet could only nod dourly when General George Pickett, commanding a fresh division of Virginians, asked permission to advance. Two depleted divisions of A. P. Hill's corps, under General Johnston Pettigrew and General Isaac R. Trimble, also stepped out of the protection of the wood line and began a march of 1 mile
