

Life for a veteran

Congress granted pensions to those soldiers wounded on the battlefield—but first they had to prove their claim. Veterans without obvious injuries had to track down their comrades to write a statement on their behalf.