

CONFEDERATE GENERAL (1806-64)

LEONIDAS POLK

Born in North Carolina in 1806, Polk attended West Point but also took holy orders, and rose to the post of Bishop for Louisiana in the Episcopal Church. He was one of the larger enslavers, controlling as many as 1,000 people at the start of the war. During the war "the fighting bishop" was a mediocre leader in the Western Theater, serving unspectacularly under Bragg in most of his campaigns. He was killed by Union artillery while conferring with officers at Pine Mountain.
