

THE ROCK OF CHICKAMAUGA

After the Union army's defeat at Chickamauga, General George Thomas and his men covered the retreat of the rest of the army into Chattanooga. They held fast on high ground until sunset, earning Thomas his nickname. Although he lost the battle, his desperate stand saved the Army of the Cumberland from destruction. This scene is from a 33-panel panorama, painted by William D. T. Travis after the war, which tells the story of the Army of the Cumberland.
