Hancock's May 12 assault on the Mule Shoe Salient was lauded in this 1864 portrayal as the "greatest victory of the war." The fighting was brutal, but Hancock's Second Corps succeeded in capturing thousands of prisoners, including two generals.

"Nothing in history equals this contest. Desperate, long, and deadly it still goes on ..."

CORPORAL WELLES TAYLOR, 110TH PENNSYLVANIA REGIMENT, TO HIS WIFE, MAY 17, 1864

The "Bloody Angle"

The Confederates held their line, as the musketry roared for most of the day. Nowhere did the fighting rage as violently as it did along
