

AFTER

In 1865, the Confederacy changed its policy on captured Black soldiers and prisoner exchanges were resumed, but these never reached their earlier rates.

GOING HOME

After the war ended—sometimes months after—Confederate prisoners in northern camps took a loyalty oath and were given train passes to go back home.

LEGACY OF BITTERNESS

Images of emaciated Andersonville survivors, published in the North after the war, helped exacerbate sectional hostility during Reconstruction (see The Politics of Reconstruction). Health issues dogged some of the survivors for the rest of their lives.

CRIMINAL OR SCAPEGOAT

Henry Wirz, commander at Andersonville, was tried by a U.S. military court and convicted of "impairing the health and destroying the lives of prisoners." He was hanged in November 1865, the only prison official on either side to be executed for war crimes.
