

CMF Phone 2 Pro

For the Gen Z mostly

It's wild to think that Nothing has only been around since 2022. In just three years, they've gone from quirky startup to one of the most exciting phone brands in India, and their sub-brand CMF, which was launched just last year, also made waves for all the right reasons. And now, the brand is back with another smartphone to extend the lineup. The CMF Phone 2 Pro isn't just a new budget phone; it's a bold, Gen Z-friendly gadget that blends fashion, function, and fun. Priced at just ₹18,999, it's trying to do a lot with custom looks, solid performance, clean UI, and more. So, how does it stack up in real life? Let's dive in.

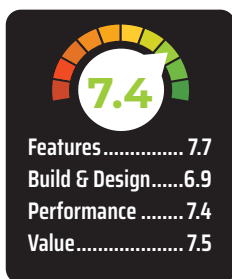

DESIGN

The CMF Phone 2 Pro doesn't come with a removable back panel like the CMF Phone 1. It does have a similar look with the screws. But despite that, the Phone 2 Pro is eye-catching in the best way possible. Whether you grab the bright Orange or the subtle Black, this phone turns heads.

The design is loud, yes, but there is one major impracticality. The screws on the back won't let you open the back this time. The only purpose they serve is to help tighten the 'Universal Cover' of the CMF Phone 2 Pro that the brand has launched with the smartphone. I mean, wouldn't it be easier if I could just put the back on in the traditional way – a simple put on!

Regarding accessories, CMF offers a wallet/stand, universal cover, lanyard, and interchangeable camera lenses. All these items come at a price of Rs 999 each, except the Lanyard. We tried reaching out to CMF for its pricing, but couldn't get a response. So, if you want to purchase all of these accessories along with the Phone 2 Pro (excluding the Lanyard), the total cost would be ₹21,999.

Honestly, I haven't found any good use for these accessories except for the wallet/stand. This not only gives support to your phone, but can also carry a card or two, and also saves the smartphone's camera lenses from scratches by not letting the smartphone touch the surface. But here's a bummer – it doesn't stick to the phone's back panel without the Universal Cover, so you would need that.

Build-wise, it's slim (7.8mm), light (185g), and surprisingly solid with a plastic body that doesn't feel cheap. You also get IP54 water resistance and Panda Glass (not Gorilla, but good enough). Also, you get the Essential Key on the side.

DISPLAY

The CMF Phone 2 Pro packs a 6.77-inch AMOLED panel. It offers up to 120Hz refresh rate, HDR10+ support, and 3000 nits of peak brightness. And honestly, the screen is decent for the price.

The best thing that you get with this display is its brightness. Visually, the CMF Phone 2 Pro is significantly brighter than its competitors, such as the Vivo T4, iQOO Z10, and the Oppo K13. Use it under direct sunlight or in complete darkness, this smartphone won't disappoint. In our testing, the CMF Phone 2 Pro scored 2240 nits of peak brightness in auto mode, which is really nice for this price range.

If you consume a lot of content, then this display is sharp and vibrant as well. It supports FHD+ resolution, 10-bit colour, and HDR10+. In simple words, the visuals look crisp and the colours look a bit over-enhanced, but only in a good way. Although there is one very major turn-off when you watch something on this phone. While the display quality is great, the speakers don't match up to that. Today, almost every other smartphone comes with a stereo speaker, the CMF Phone 2 Pro, you get a Mono Speaker setup, which means it has speakers only at the bottom.

According to our display tests using Portrait's Calman and C6 Colorimeter, the CMF Phone 2 Pro got an Average Delta E of 1.5, which means what you see on the screen very closely matches the real-world colours.

PERFORMANCE

The CMF Phone 2 Pro runs on the MediaTek Dimensity 7300 Pro chipset, which is paired with 8GB RAM and comes in two storage variants- 128GB and 256GB. However, if you need more storage on your smartphone, it comes with a hybrid SIM tray, where you can put either 2 SIM cards or one SIM card and one memory card.

Now, about its performance, the CMF Phone 2 Pro scored almost seven lakh points in AnTuTu. This number is what we expect from sub-₹20,000 smartphones. On the Geekbench 6 test, the smartphone scored 1016 on the single-core test and 2938 on the multi-core test.
