hen it comes to smartphones under ₹25,000, we all have different priorities.

Some of us want high performance, others crave good cameras, and a few of us just want a phone that lasts all day without dying on us. Today, we're comparing two phones that promise a solid experience in this segment, particularly in the design segment- the Motorola Edge 60 Fusion and the Nothing Phone 3a. Both have their own unique styles and feel, but let's see what this Motorola Edge 60 Fusion vs Nothing Phone 3a battle has to say!

Software and UI

Let's talk about software first. Both phones run great, with clean UIs. Moto UI is smooth, minimalistic, and feels like stock Android with a touch of elegance.

On the other hand, Nothing OS has a more fun vibe with its customisation options and the signature glyph interface.

As for AI features, Nothing Phone 3a has a cool Essential Key, which is like your personal journal. You can use it to access the Essential Space, take screenshots, and organise notes with AI. But the Motorola Edge 60 Fusion takes it up a notch with Moto AI, offering features like notification summaries,
