iOS 26 beta 4 brings back AI news summaries

Apple has released iOS 26 beta 4, reintroducing several key features and design updates that were previously toned down. The update revives the Liquid Glass interface, a translucent, layered visual style that enhances aesthetics while improving readability and dynamic color response. Also returning are AI-powered news and entertainment notification summaries. Additionally, iOS 26 beta 4 improves consistency across system visuals and iconography, polishing the overall UI. The update includes enhanced performance for Apple Intelligence features and bug fixes. Apple appears to be preparing for a broader rollout of iOS 26 in the coming months, likely in September, bringing a refined and AI-integrated experience to iPhones.

■ CLEVER NEW FEATURE

Google Chrome for iOS makes it easier to manage multiple accounts

Google Chrome for iOS has introduced an update that simplifies managing multiple Google accounts, particularly for users using BYOD (Bring Your Own Device) setups. With the new update, users can now toggle seamlessly between profiles. Chrome ensures complete separation of data between accounts, maintaining distinct tabs, history, and passwords. This feature integrates with Chrome Enterprise, giving IT admins better oversight through features like enterprise reporting and URL filtering. A visual indicator lets users know when they're operating within a managed work profile. While this functionality is currently limited to enterprise environments, it represents a major step forward in bringing Chrome on iOS closer in functionality to its desktop version and enhancing overall productivity on mobile.
