

Google faces lawsuit from big publisher over AI summaries

Google is facing a new lawsuit from Penske Media Corporation (PMC), which owns well-known publications such as Rolling Stone, Billboard, Variety, Hollywood Reporter, Deadline, Vibe and Artforum. The company accuses Google of using publishers' content without proper permission to power AI-generated summaries in search results. PMC argues that Google is using its dominant position in search to force publishers into a deal they never agreed to. tinyurl.com/4z9wc34c

OpenAI announces AI-powered hiring platform like LinkedIn

OpenAI has revealed it's working to build out an AI-powered hiring platform named OpenAI Jobs Platform. Along with the job platform, the company has also introduced OpenAI Certifications. The OpenAI Jobs Platform will connect companies with skilled people at all levels, and help workers find jobs where they can use their talents. AI will be used to match what businesses need with what workers can offer. This platform isn't just for big companies, according to OpenAI. It will also support local businesses and governments. tinyurl.com/3uymaab9

Gemini Nano Banana's risky AI virality

New AI image editing tool is all fun, or is it a privacy scare?

—By Vyom Ramani

In September 2025, a new AI-powered photo editing tool swept across social media, turning selfies into Bollywood-style portraits and pets into plush toys. Known as "Nano Banana" – the playful nickname for Google's Gemini 2.5 Flash Image model – this feature within the Gemini app has captivated millions, driving over 500 million image generations and 10 million new downloads in weeks. Its ability to blend user-uploaded photos with imaginative prompts has made it a viral sensation. Yet, beneath the creative frenzy, experts are raising urgent concerns about privacy violations and the threat of deepfakes, casting a shadow over this digital playground.

An explosion of viral trends

Nano Banana redefines photo editing by combining advanced AI with simple text prompts, transforming images in seconds. Available via the Gemini app or web interface, it excels at preserving subject likeness while applying fantastical edits, earning a 170 Elo score lead over rivals in image editing benchmarks. Its accessibility has fueled its meteoric rise, making Gemini the top free app in markets like India and the U.S.

The tool has birthed a slew of viral trends, each dominating platforms like Instagram, TikTok, and X:

The Saree Trend: A cultural hit in India, this transforms selfies into vintage Bollywood portraits with intricate sarees and cinematic lighting. Prompts like "Edit my photo into a 1950s Bollywood star in a red saree" produce stunning, shareable results.

3D Figurines: Globally beloved, this trend turns portraits or pet photos into collectible-style miniatures, as if displayed on a virtual shelf. Prompts like "Create a hyper-realistic 3D figurine of me as a designer toy in a display case" have sparked millions of posts.

Celebrity Selfies: Users blend into star-studded scenes or morph into celebrity lookalikes with prompts like "Turn this selfie into a polaroid with me and a Hollywood star on a red carpet," creating dream-like hybrids.

Polaroids: For retro vibes, this trend converts photos into faded polaroid-style shots. Prompts like "Make this a vintage polaroid from the 1980s, with handwritten notes" are a hit for aesthetic feeds out there.

Pet Transformations: Animal lovers turn pets into plush toys or fantasy creatures with prompts like "Make my dog a plush toy in a storybook world," driving engagement with adorable results.

Privacy and deepfake risks

While Nano Banana delights, it raises serious privacy concerns. The tool relies on user-uploaded images, and Google's terms permit these to be used for training future AI models, potentially without explicit consent. This means personal photos could linger in datasets, raising fears of unintended exposure. Child safety advocates have labeled kid-friendly versions "high risk" for data leaks, urging caution with sensitive uploads. tinyurl.com/4uk2b8u6
