Microsoft announces Windows update with AI superpowers

Microsoft has unveiled a monumental, AI-centric update for Windows 11, strategically positioning Copilot as the operating system's deeply integrated core intelligence. This upgrade transforms every Windows 11 PC into a comprehensive AI assistant by introducing groundbreaking capabilities that extend beyond simple text prompts. Users can now interact via voice, vision, and actions, letting Copilot guide tasks, offer real-time feedback, organise files, and even assist in gaming. Features like Gaming Copilot for in-game assistance, Manus AI, and enhanced taskbar access aim to make every PC a secure, AI-powered assistant. tinyurl.com/w11cpa

Google TV to get AI-based interactive features

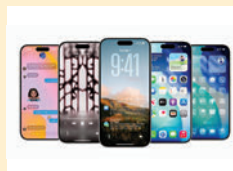

The Google TV app teardown hints at many upcoming AI features, including Sparkify, a generative video tool that is powered by Gemini and Veo for creating short, animated videos from prompts. An inactivity prompt may pause playback when users are idle, improving power efficiency. These experimental features suggest that Google is integrating generative AI even more deeply into its smart TV ecosystem. tinyurl.com/aifvtg

Perplexity AI as search option in Mozilla Firefox

Mozilla is adding Perplexity AI to Firefox, offering a chat-style search option with summarized answers and source citations. Desktop users worldwide can now access it, with mobile support coming soon. Mozilla emphasizes user choice and privacy, letting people decide when or if to use AI, while also expanding browser profiles and testing Google Lens visual search. tinyurl.com/pa4imf iOS 26.1 beta 4 allows customized Liquid Glass transparency

Apple's latest beta for iOS, iPadOS, and macOS adds a new customization option for Liquid Glass, letting users choose between Clear or Tinted appearances. The update improves readability for notifications and navigation while maintaining the sleek modern look. Settings are in Display & Brightness on iPhone/iPad and Appearance on Mac, automatically applying users' choices in supported apps. tinyurl.com/2iosb4
