

Bluetooth Speaker

Sound that leaves an impression

The Bluetooth speaker category has always been a tricky one to judge. The best products must balance portability with power, durability with design, and convenience with a sound signature that doesn't fall apart outdoors. This year, the competition tightened as brands leaned heavily into smarter tuning, stronger wireless capabilities, and longer-lasting batteries. After weeks of testing in living rooms, balconies on a windy afternoon and the Digit Test Labs, two speakers stood out for very different reasons. One was an out and out performance king, the other offered the best value for money in a bluetooth speaker all year round. Let's dive into the best bluetooth speakers of 2025!

Zero1 Winner: Sonos Move 2

Sonos has long been synonymous with premium multiroom audio, but the Move 2 shows the brand can excel in the portable segment as well. The design hasn't changed much from the first generation, but the improvements on the inside make it one of the most refined Bluetooth speakers you can buy today. The Move 2 now plays stereo content natively, and the clarity it delivers, especially with vocals and instruments, puts it in a league of its own.

Sonos' Automatic Trueplay, powered by a far-field mic array, continuously adjusts the sound based on your surroundings. Whether we placed it in a corner, on a dining table, or outdoors, the Move 2 maintained a consistently balanced signature with crisp highs and a warm mid-bass foundation. While it doesn't go extremely deep in the low end, the precision it offers makes up for everything else.

The Move 2 is also one of the few speakers where the software experience feels as important as the hardware. The Sonos app, Alexa integration, AirPlay 2 support, and responsive touch controls make it a reliable home companion as much as a travel-ready device. It's combination of sound quality, smart features, and robust build earns it the top spot.

Runner-up & Best Buy: Sony ULT Field 5

Sony's ULT Power Sound series is designed for listeners who like their music loud, energetic, and bass-forward, and the ULT Field 5 fits that description perfectly. This is a speaker built for the outdoors with IP67 protection and the ability to float, whether that's a farmhouse trip, a poolside get-together, or your weekend balcony jam.

The sound signature leans fun: punchy high-bass, bright treble, and enough volume to fill medium-sized outdoor spaces. With support for LDAC, a 10-band EQ, ULT preset modes, and even room correction, Sony gives users enough ways to shape their sound. At maximum volume, the bass does experience compression, but distortion remains minimal. Stamina Mode pushes battery life past an impressive 68 hours, which is a major win for travel.

At 3.3 kg, it's not the lightest portable speaker, but the included strap makes it manageable to carry around. You also get useful extras like USB-C device charging and Party Connect pairing. What makes the ULT Field 5 our Best Buy winner is its balance of output, ruggedness, features, and price. It gets close to party-speaker performance without the size or cost typically associated with full-sized models.
