Doot AI agent for every citizen

The Digi Doot whitepaper, released alongside the India AI Impact Summit 2026, suggests that India may now be attempting for artificial intelligence what it once achieved with digital payments. Nothing less than a billion plus population-scale public infrastructure moment powered by agentic AI.

Authored by an unusually heavyweight coalition including MIT Media Lab's Ramesh Raskar, Aadhaar's founding CTO Srikanth Nadhamuni, and contributors from IISc, IIT Kanpur and the broader DPI ecosystem, the paper proposes a deceptively simple idea.

The Doot AI paper suggests that every Indian should get a personal AI agent. Not an app, not a free chatbot service. An actual digital twin that you can delegate tasks under certain conditions.

Digit Doot mirrors the rhetoric that once surrounded Aadhaar and UPI – public infrastructure designed not merely for efficiency but for inclusion. tinyurl.com/2rschfax

India AI Impact Summit 2026: Biggest investment announcements by tech giants

At the AI Impact Summit 2026, the scale of investment commitments announced underlined the fact that artificial intelligence had become core national infrastructure. The purpose of the event went beyond product showcases; it was designed to position India as a serious AI infrastructure hub, capable of building, hosting, and scaling advanced models domestically rather than relying solely on overseas compute. tinyurl.com/5az33bbc

Sarvam AI's Indus app launches quietly

Indus is an AI assistant designed by Sarvam specifically for the Indian users and landscape. The company claims that the app focuses strongly on multilingual conversations and is indigenous (built in India).

The AI firm also said that the users can chat in English and switch to Hindi mid-conversation without restarting the session, and the session will continue smoothly with no disruptions. tinyurl.com/54puctks
