

Summit halls to esports roars

Febbruary didn't feel like a 28-day month in the least bit. It felt like we tried to fit 45 days into it at a relentless pace.

Two mega-events defined the calendar: the India AI Impact Summit 2026 and the grand finale of SKOAR! College Cup – Delhi Edition. One was policy, power suits, and AI's future. The other was headshots, hype casters, and 1,500+ students screaming for clutch plays. Digit, naturally, decided to do both at full throttle.

Let's start with the Summit. Across six packed days in New Delhi (Feb 16–21), the team braved cavernous halls, impossible schedules, and crowds that moved like algorithmic traffic. It was controlled chaos. The good kind.

For Madhav, it was transformative. An introvert by default, he found himself sprinting across the massive venue, microphone in hand, chasing conversations with people from across India – and the world. Interview after interview, introduction after introduction. What used to feel intimidating became instinct. The learning curve wasn't gentle; it was vertical. The India

Vyom and Mithun went beyond their usual call of duty

AI Impact Summit didn't just give him stories. It gave him momentum.

Vyom's Summit-adjacent adventure at the IBM AI Leadership event had a slightly different flavour. He arrived armed with a camera and exactly zero context – learning the event's name at the venue, among other things. Three hours of limbo later, he discovered that "bytes" were an evening affair. So he waited. The evening brought round tables, executives deep in discussion, and Mithun moderating like he owned the room. Vyom, meanwhile, found himself in silent competition with a dinner buffet that was clearly winning. No dramatic wins. A handful of bytes. Sometimes that's the whole story.

While AI dominated Delhi, esports owned Greater Noida. The SKOAR! College Cup – Delhi Edition 2026 Grand Finale (Feb 19–20, Bennett University) marked the showdown of one of the region's largest inter-college esports tournaments. 200+ colleges. 2,000+ teams. 1,500+ students on-ground. Valorant and BGMI finals. An Experience

Zone buzzing throughout. It wasn't just an event; it was an atmosphere.

For Krishika, it was personal. Ground reporting at Bennett University – the place that shaped her – while hosting at such a scale felt surreal. She walked in backed by the SKOAR! and Digit team that believed she could pull it off. That faith became fuel. Nostalgic, electric, career-defining – all at once.

Amid the big stages, there were smaller celebrations too. Divyanshi quietly completed six months at Digit. The milestone got a LinkedIn post and a small pizza party at home. Sometimes growth is loud. Sometimes it's mozzarella and family selfies.

And then there was Siddharth Malhotra's great Bearista hunt. Starbucks launched a new cup. He and Divyanshi went looking. Sold out. Rage. Exit. Third Wave coffee instead. February lesson: hype is temporary, caffeine is eternal.

Two cities. Two massive events. Hundreds of stories. Many small victories. February didn't slow down. It levelled us up big time. **📺
