

TECHNIQUE MEETS TRADITION

VAIBHAV BOGHANI'S MODERN PLATES

WITH CLASSICAL ROOTS

"I try to blend flavours that might not necessarily agree with country borders," says Vaibhav Boghani, a young chef and digital content creator who has gained significant recognition for his sophisticated approach to "elevated fusion." He often explores the tension between innovation and heritage, asking his audience whether changing a dish's structure while preserving its soul is a betrayal or progression of tradition. As he says, "no invention comes without experimentation."

What was the spark that made you a creator?

The creator journey has been a roller coaster to say the least, in an interesting way obviously; it's a constant challenge to prove to myself that I am better than I was yesterday. I've always loved cooking but sharing the recipes feels much more personal to me because literally anyone in the world has access to it.

What is it about being a creator that most people don't realise?

The video that people see as a small thirty second reel actually takes hours of planning, scripting, video-graphy, editing and so much more to make sure that the audience that spends their time on these videos is actually educated, entertained and involved by them.

Is your content creation journey centered around a mission?

My content is centered around the mission of borderless food. Something has to taste good in terms of flavours used, everything else being right or wrong are constructs we have created in our own minds. An impact is definitely there; I've seen people try looking at food as more than just what is 'supposed to be' to 'what it could also be'.

How did you overcome challenges you faced in your journey?

Content creation in India still faces some judgement in terms of a career. The stigma of it not being a safe career still hasn't left people's minds. The only way to overcome it and the way I did it is to show the results of your work. Keep working towards your goal and the doubts will change into appreciation. Just never lose self-confidence.

What's your perspective on AI in content creation?

I feel like AI at this point is very important to leverage but at the same time your touch is what makes your content feel personal. Using AI to think what to do more clearly is important rather than making it do the thinking for you. I personally use AI for some ideation using flavour matrices and bringing balance into recipes.

Your advice for anyone who wants to be a content creator in India?

Get out of the mind-set of making the best video and posting it then, that is procrastination masked as perfectionism. Start bad and keep making improvements. Make tangible your worst fears, anything you do from there will only be better.

Your favourite content creators?

My favourites are Chefs Sanjyot Keer and Saloni Kukreja. They are the ones who I used to look at and think maybe I should also do this because of how approachable they make recipes feel. It made me want to give people that same access.
