

"I JUST STARTED PLAYING"

ANSHU BISHT'S WORLD

AROUND GAMING

For Anshu Bisht, the journey into content creation began without strategy or expectation. "It started very casually. I was just playing games and uploading videos without thinking too much about where it would go," he recalls. That moment of realisation, of people not just watching but deeply engaging with his content, became the spark that transformed a hobby into a full-fledged creative pursuit.

What's unique about your content?

I think my content is a mix of storytelling and gaming. It's not just about playing a game, it's about creating a world around it that people can feel a part of. Whether it's Minecraft or a live stream, I try to make it entertaining, emotional, and community-driven. What makes it unique is that people don't just watch, they feel involved in the journey with me.

What is the most misunderstood thing about being a creator?

From the outside, it looks like fun and easy. People think you just sit, play games, and upload videos. But there's a lot that goes behind it. The pressure to stay consistent, to keep coming up with ideas, to stay relevant, and at the same time deal with your own ups and downs. It's creative work but it's also mental work, and that balance is something people don't really see.

Do you have a mission around your content?

For me, the mission has always been to show that gaming can be more than just a hobby. It can be something you build a life around. I want to create content that people enjoy but also something that inspires them to take their own passions seriously. If even a small percentage of my audience feels motivated to start something because of my journey, that already feels like a big impact.

How did you overcome challenges you faced in your journey?

One of the biggest challenges earlier was that gaming was not taken seriously. People didn't see it as a career option. Even today, there are challenges like algorithm changes, competition, and audience expectations. But at the same time, India has huge opportunities because the audience is growing so fast. I focused on consistency and just kept improving my content. Over time, that builds trust and that's what helps you stay.

What's your perspective on AI in content creation?

AI is a powerful tool if used correctly. It can help with ideas, editing, and making processes faster. But if you rely on it too heavily, you can lose your originality. Content becomes repetitive and doesn't feel real. For me, AI is more of a support system, not the main creator. The core idea and emotion still need to come from you.

Your advice for anyone who wants to be a content creator in India?

Start without overthinking. You don't need perfect equipment or a perfect plan. Just begin and stay consistent. Focus on improving with every video. And most importantly, enjoy what you're doing because if you don't enjoy it, it won't last. d
