

The first computer

In 1943, engineers in the US began designing a machine that could be programmed to solve different math problems. This was the Electronic Numerical Integrator And Computer (ENIAC, “en-ee-ack”)—the first computer. The ENIAC could follow 5,000 instructions per second, which was 1,000 times faster than the calculators of the time. It was huge and filled a whole room.

