

Village life

Many early Stone Age villages had shelters that could be moved easily so that people could follow animal herds for food and skins. Villagers may have come from different related families who lived apart some of the time and then came together for the hunting season. People would have needed to meet people from other villages and groups to find partners for mating!

A typical Stone Age village

WOW!
For more than 5,000 years, Skara Brae was buried in the earth. In 1850, a powerful storm revealed the Stone Age village.