

Pride in their culture

Troops often had tour jackets personalized with images and dates of service. This jacket, now in the National Museum of African American History and Culture in Washington, D.C., declared support for the Black Power movement.